

ABSTRACT

A personal trusted device, such as a mobile phone, receives by default or conditionally an automatic notification when the user's credit card or its number is being used for a commercial transaction. The user can then instantly determine whether or not to instruct the credit card company to inactivate the card.